Target-specific representation prevents one physical response from standing in for the other